insight into the mind of the physician.1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. The Whole Brain Physician ReaderBy spsandersCogent, but mildly condescending view of what motivates physicians and how they view their role in the healthcare system. Somewhat unfairly maligns physicians for behaving in exactly the way they were trained to behave. Still, it's a quick read and may shed some light to the novice administrator.0 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Spot onBy jhagenIf we are to believe that all physicians are the same, then we'd really love this peek into the expert culture. I have a brother who is a doctor, and it was actually very helpful to understand how they were trained and how they interact with other doctors and with administrators. It's helped our relationship and I look forward to using this knowledge to improve my relationships with other doctors as their administrator.

Dr. Joseph Bujak provides an insider's perspective on the beliefs and behaviors of physicians. His insight will prompt you to question your assumptions and break through the barriers that may be keeping you from forming productive relationships with the physicians in your organization. He also provides suggestions for using your new understanding to influence physician behavior and promote enduring partnerships. With candor and wit, Dr. Bujak shares the wisdom he has developed through his years of experience as both a physician and an administrator: A physician's sense of time is very different from that of an administrator, Being chief of staff is the equivalent of drawing the short straw, A physician's definition of teamwork is like the game of golf, Traditional medical staff organization is not the vehicle for developing relationships with physicians, A good role model for influencing physician behavior is the old TV character Columbo, You should approach change using the metaphor of moving a Slinky and Generation-X physicians differ greatly from traditionalist, or baby boomer, physicians; propositions acceptable to Generation-X physicians will be rejected by the others, and vice versa
