(Technical Report (RAND)) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Economic Burden of Providing Health Insurance: How Much Worse Off Are Small Firms? (Technical Report (RAND)):

More than 60 percent of nonelderly Americans receive health-insurance (HI) coverage through employers. However, rising health-care costs may threaten the long-term viability of the employer-based insurance system. This report explores trends in the economic burden associated with HI provision for small and large businesses, as well as the quality of plans that small and large firms offer.

From the Inside Flap This report explores trends in the economic burden faced by small and large businesses that provide health insurance, as well as the quality of plans that small and large firms offer.
